ZZAP ZO

How much!? Okay, okay, so we've taken the plunge and increased the cover price. Again, But the very fact that you're reading this proves that you, at least, have decided £2 95 isn't beyond the bounds of reason

So what are you getting for your (extra) money? And what are the poor lools who have passed us by this month missing out on? Well, first off (and to state the obvious), you're getting an extra megatape. But this isn't planned as a one-off. Readers of this hallowed tome can expect double megatape fun EVERY MONTH! We're gonna cram those muthas with every decent game, demo, adventure and whatever we can lay out hands on ... so don't touch that dial!

A less obvious advantage, but equally important in the grand design. is the fact that each and every tape will now be duplicated by a company called Ablex. Experts in their magnetic field, Ablex are responsible for producing C64 games for big software houses such as Ocean, U.S. Gold, Gremlin, CodeMasters, Kixx. Core Design and yes, you guessed it. many many more! No more irate readers ringing up bemoaning the facil that their cover-cassettes just will not bloody load. Oh happy days are here . at last!

And, as if you hadn't noticed, we're also BIGGER. A whole two centimetres per page bigger, to be exact Flashy? Sure! But if it allows us to include larger, more detailed screen-shot maps, then we reckon it's worth it. Besides, if you keep a careful eye on the competition you'll discover that our £2,95 is but a small price to pay (dig, dig!).

So, until next month, Happy

Well float my longboat, if it isn't that Scandinavian lardbucket Hagar, making his C64 debut in an all-action, rip-roaring platform collect-'em-up! The full version will feature no less than eight exciting levels, and we've got the whole of Level One just for you!

Hagar is not a happy chappy. Sailing the seven seas in search of adventure, gold and lots of mindless violence isn't the easiest of jobs, especially now his least lavounte battleaxe mis wife, Helga) is demanding all sorts of goodles! You'll need all your wits about you, there are numerous nasties determined to stop you in your tracks!

To get into Level One (and if you're playing the demo, that's all you can do), sieer Hagar's press fire. If you want to sail to any of the other islands, buy the game! As well as the normal joystick controls you can activate special weaponsusing the function keys:

F6 — Knife F7 — Spear

F8 - Axe

F9 - Fireball

F1 0 — Magic Potion (smart bomb) These goodles can be bought in the shop, or in some cases picked up off the floor. (That was careless of somebody wasn't it?)

To complete the level you'll need all four object specified by Helga, it ain't easy, but lite never is!

The techs have certainly done you proud - a jeep that can leap into the air isn't to be sniffed at. With front and rearmounted guns, if you fail to blast enemy grenades and mega-bombs you'll die horribly. Use the ramps to travel on the upper platforms. Beware the big cavern — avoid the roof and grenades at all costs.

You begin with five jeeps, a bonus vehicle awarded on completion of each colour command section. When you die you restart at the beginning of the level. If your score reaches 50,000 you can restart the entire game on the level you died on.

hadayamean you don't know what to do? Aintche ever played a Tetris-style game before? Oh, all right.

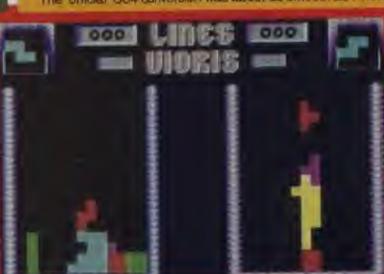

Vioris is based on the classic puzzler from the Soviet Union. As a game concept it couldn't be simpler - rotate the falling blocks using the fire button (each time you press it the descending block turns 90 degrees), and steer them left and right with the Joystick, pulling down to make them tall taster. The aim of the game is to fit the pieces together without leaving any gaps. Complete horizontal rows disappear, piling up points and allowing anything resting on them to ther releasing the Terminator 2 pack without a datacorder, news of a forthcoming C64 package won't exactly have us on the edge of our seals. Imagine all those 72ers tearing away the Christmas paper, expecting a whole new world of grazy Commodore capers to open before them, only lo find that unless they spent £30 on an infector foreign datacerder they'd be choosing from a (carringe) software base of about a dozen games! So will Commodore repeal this fiasco? No, this one looks like a winner - honest!

Due to hit the mail-order market in a couple of weeks, the new C64 outfit still doesn't have a datacorder but does have a super-quick 1541 disk drive (just the thing for playing Elvira 21), and costs a mere £149 a throw! Not bad when you consider a 1541 will knock you back a gool £135 on its own.

On the software front, it's advertised as coming with two Ocean games: The Addams Family, which we could do without, and the mysterious Parasal Stars, which we could do WITHI If you've read last month's STUFF you'll know Parasoi Stars was shelved 'coz the programmer had his code pinched — so what gives? Did they catch the rotten robber? Did he rewrite the game in double-quick time? Maybe he found a spare copy in his sock drawer! Confused as hell, we called to ask what happened. here's something 'orrible coming our way ... CHANNEL 51 Due for launch in 1994, the fifth non-satellite TV channel will broadcast on the same frequency as our beloved C64s, and could make the picture go all fuzzy and impossible to see. Its effect on video recorders has been widely publicised and is easily corrected, but no one seems to be saying too much about home computer. much about home computers.

'It will only happen if you live very close to a transmitter,' argued Channel 5 spokesmen Ellis Griffiths. The problem with videos is that they're connected to the TV's aerial, and the signal is channelled through them on their way to the telly This isn't the case with home computers. You have to disconnect the aerial before you can plug the computer lead in, so the TV signal won't interfere with the computer's. If people living very close to transmitters have any problems, we'll pay for any adjustments." Remember, you read it here first, Tolks

I'm not normally fond of this type game, but in Elvira 2's case I'll make an exception. Graphically the game's drokking brill, especially the half-chewed bodies of unfortunate victims and the creatures that caused their demise lurking behind doors. This is so phirit-inducing, I often ended up cringing before entering any of the rooms:

The icon control system takes a short while to suss, but it's so comprehensive that even a thick sod like me was soon zooming around collecting stuff and kicking ass. The puzzle element may turn some people off as it's perhaps a tad tough for novices. But with a tew problems successfully solved, the urge to continue is strong. My only moan is the amount of disks, and the slow access time of the drive. Despite this, Elvira girlfnend Elvira is kidnapped and taken to some film studios where she is to be sacrificed at midnight to Cerebus, the three-headed guardian of the underworld. You must battle your way through this Gothic nightmare and rescue your gorgeous beloved. Beware — a second Elvira has been created to confuse!

Like its predecessor Mistress Of The Dark, Elvira 2 is a roleplaying adventure based on the American Florior show compere (real name Cassandra Peterson). Don't worry if you hate text input, 'coz there isn't any — it's entirely joystick-and-pointer-controlled! Click on a useful-looking item, and if you can grab it the pointer turns into a hand — drag if into your inventory box and it's yours. If you click and nothing happens it's probably just scenery. Some objects are a little hard to see on-screen, so have a little play around with the pointer, clicking on everything until you hear a good, solid bleep. You never know what you'll find!

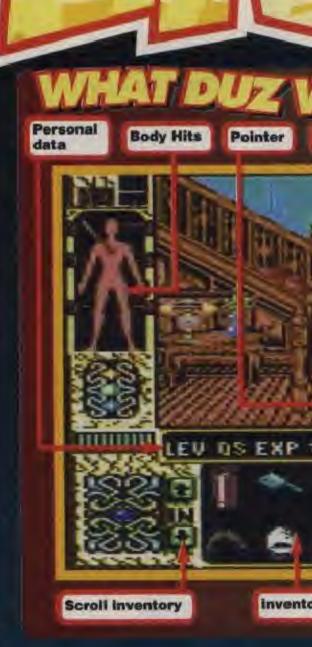

Pick-up & drop 'em!

Obviously there's more to objects than picking them up and dropping them again. Examining it gives a brief description, and depending on what it is there's usually at least one USE option too. Food and drink can be eaten, the rock can be thrown, a key might unlock a door or chest, etc. Alternatively it might be used in one of the many spells on offer (more on this later). Click on a container (eg a box) and you're given the option of looking in. To take something out, move it onto the main screen — a curious way of going about it, but it works!

Moving around's a little tricky at first but you soon get used to it. Click on the movement icons to walk forwards, backwards, turn around altogether or face right and left. This can be awkward as you often can't turn in a given direction, not because it's physically impossible but because there aren't any graphics for that viewpoint. While this is undeniably claustrophobic (exploring the guard's office at the start is especially confusing), it's a necessary evil — the only way round if would be to make every wall the same and superimpose the scenery on it, making those gorgeous graphics really boodoring and atmosphere-destroying.

How can someone as flabby and lethargic as PHIL 'BURGER' KING compete in the Olympics? By waggling his joystick, of course, as he plays the field of multi-event sports sims (excluding military, circus or weird ones).

his is the business as far as Olympic sims go. Up to eight players compete in eight varied, superbly presented events. On the disk version, there's even an option to merge the game with its predecessor Summer Games to play 16 events in one go!

Unlike other Olympic sims, Summer Games II replaces tiresome (and tiring) waggling with skilful controls. Take the Triple Jump, for instance. No waggling is needed to make your man run - just accurately timed joystick movements for the hop, skip, jump and extra boost in mid air.

Rowing does require left/right movement but no frenetically fast - a good rhythm produces the highest rowing speed. In multi-player mode, two players compete head to head Chucking the Javelin doesn't require waggling (or bottom wiggling) either. Press fire quickly to increase speed, then hold left to set the angle of throw.

There haven't been many computer horse-riding

sims so the Equestrian event is a nice novelty. It's no nag either. As the course scrolls right to left, accurate timing is needed to successfully jump fences, walls and water hazards

High Jump allows you set your height between 1.8 and 2.5 metres. Rapid right joystick movements make your man sprint. Timing is crucial when you press fire to jump and right to clear the bar.

timed joystick movements — as with later events, the emphasis is on skill rather than strenuous joystick waggling

Only slow, hythmic waggling is required for Barrel Jumping to gain speed before pressing fire to clear a line of barrels. Next comes the real brown-trunks jobbie: Clift Diving in Acapulcol Judge the wind to clear the rocks by a whisker for the highest-scoring dive Quick reactions are needed for Statom Skring. Zigzag around the flags to avoid time penalties, but ski as straight as possible for extra speed. The main hazard here is going straight into one of the flags, resulting in instant disqualification from one of your two runs.

The arm in Log Rolling is not to get wet. In multi-player games this is a simultaneous two-player contest, both competitors altering the speed and direction of their rolling to try and throw the other bloke oil balance. The following event has to be the horniest ever as you mount a mad animal in Bull Riding. React instantaneously to the bull's movements (including spins) to stay onboard for the required eigni seconds

The last two events are my personal favourlies. Tossing The Caber requires slow waggling in time with the tosser's legs to hold his huge pole at the right angle, before tossing it as far as possible. Get it wrong and it lands on his head, hammering him into the ground! Finally, Sumo has two stim (compared to me!) wrestlers trying to push or throw each other out of the ring. Again, in multi-player games this is a competitive two-player event.

At the end of the day, the medal table is shown with each competitor scoring points for their medals. Win or lose, it's a hallova lot of fun. As well as looking great, the events are really well designed, combining quick reactions, careful timing and the odd bit of waggling. As with all Epyx sims, any event can be practised to your heart's content.

Of course, multi-player games are best with a really competitive atmosphere (especially in the head-to-head two-player events), but even in solo games there's the world records to aim for. World Games is a timeless classic and has been available on the Kixx budget label (on tape and he Konamy cain-op follow-up to the legendar Track & Field was converted in fine style to the C64 (albeit minus the pole-vaulling event). The game was even used in a long-forgollen TV guiz with Debbie Greenwood (phwoarl)

The six events here are supremely playable diving off with a cracking swimming rac Waggle to swim faster, not forgetting to press fire to breathe at regular intervals (breathe unde water and you spluiter to a standslill!).

A far less exhausting event is Skeet Shooling Press left/right to fire the barrels of your shorgur

Fencing gives you the option of a head-to-head contest. The first player to score five hits within the lime limit wins. Available moves include thrust, parry and defensive sweeps. If the score is tied at the end of the time limit, there's a (tastefully named) 'sudden death' fence-off.

On your bike! Although the Cycling sprint race doesn't feature waggling either, you do have to rotate your joyistick in time with an arrow to make your rider pedal. To attain top speed you must move slightly ahead of the arrow — but get too far ahead of it and you stop pedalling altogether. Again, in multi-player mode there's the option of head-to-head racing.

Probably the trickiest event is Kayaking, where you paddle furiously to get through gates, some of which must be entered backwards or upstream. What really makes this event is the effective control system: steering with left/right and paddling by repeatedly pushing up or down.

Nearly seven years after its debut, Summer Games II still stands out as one of the great sports sims of all time. You might have some trouble getting hold of it now, but it was incorporated into US Gold's Gold, Silver & Bronze megacompilation, along with Summer Games and Winter Games.

at the clay pigeons — but them all and you get a bonus duck to shoot!

Horse-vaciling leatures an automatic run-up (no waggling) but isn't as easy as it sounds.

Accurate timing is needed to hit the springboard right at the end, wait till your man is doing a handstand on the norse, then get in as many rotations before landing (hopefully on your feet!).

Another relaxing event follows. Archery requires careful filling to release arrows at the right angle rowards downward-scrolling targets. After he welcome rest comes more waggling

After he welcome rest comes more waggling for the run-up to the Triple Jump, but holding down fire to achieve the optimum angle for hop, skip and jump is critical.

Skip and jumin's entical.

The real waygling killer, though, is Weightliting. On higher weights it's a real his is really cool. First of seven events is the Hot Dog Aerials. To my disappointment this doesn't include mustard and ketchup but is still a tasty treat. Six stunts are available including flips, backscratchers and daffies. Awkward movements and falls reduce your score.

After a quick change of dress (and sex), you're ready for the Figure Skating. Impress the judges with a range of seven spins and jumps — time the landings exactly or end up with a cold bottom!

Returned to male form, you go for the Ski Jump. Continually adjust your flight position or end up like Eddie Edwards — a sad prospect indeed!

Free Skating is just like Figure Skating except you have to perform each movement three times within two minutes.

Speed Skating, on the other hand, is a completely different kettle of ice. It's a head-to-head, split-screen race against a human or computer opponent. Speed is achieved not by rapid waggling but by attaining a good rhythm with the skater's legs.

A similar technique is used for the crosscountry skiing in Biathlon. At regular intervals you stop to fire you rifle at five targets — missing one incurs a five-second penalty.

Finally, there's no room for error in the Bobsleigh. Accurate steering around corners is needed as you hurtle down the 3-D track.

As with Summer Games II, the events are well thought out with good control systems. The graphical standard is even better with some gorgeous backdrops and convincing sprites, and sound's great too with loads of tunes. Definitely the best wintry sim around.

SUMMER GAMES Apyx/US Gold Events: 8; Players: 8

The only real waggler here is the 100m Sprint, though rhythmic fire pressing is required for both Swimming events (100m and 4x100m). Back on land, the 4x100m Sprint is more strategic, with you simply controlling the speed of the runner to make optimum use of energy.

Again, no waggling is needed for Diving and Vaulting — aerial movements are controlled by various joystick directions. One of the best (and realistically tricky) events is the Pole Vault press fire at exactly the right time to plant the pole, flip over the bar and release the pole, Last but not least is the skilful Skeet Shooting.

Like all Epyx games, Summer Games is brilliantly presented with loads of practice and competition options. Graphics are also excellent with smooth animation in every event and attractive backdrops. Most importantly, the events play really well, requiring lots of practice to get the best out of them. Great fun to play with a group of friends.

efinitely Daley's best performance, this comprises eight varied events. Pure waggling is needed for Cycling, Rowing and Tug O'War, while Ski Jump, Football Penalties (one of my faves!) and Diving require waggling and skilful timing, Pistol Shooting and Giant Stalom are pure skill events.

Obviously the waggling is tiring on your arm, but the more skilful events give you a rest. As with Hypersports, the events wrap round until you fail to qualify, and though it's not quite as playable as that game, DT's Supertest is good fun for a while.

pyx's reworking of the winter theme isn't as playable as their original Winter Games. It's still brilliantly presented (apart from the two-disk multiload), though, and most of the seven events are good fun.

Among the best are downhill and sistem sking. As well as a fast 3-D view, you get intermittent 2-D scenes from the cameras placed along the piste. Speed Skating is also a laugh with a great two-player mode. One of the most sophisticated events (though a trifle dull) is the figure skating. Budding Christopher Deans can even plan out a choreographed routine and choose a suitable piece of music!

A lot of the events are tricky to start with, the tiniest mistake completely mucking things up, but once you get the hang it's pretty playable.

he original joystick's nightmare is still well worth a bash if you can find it (it was rereleased live years ago!). Running events are particularly good with two-player, head-to-head races. Other events are implemented simply but effectively. Yes, it's hard on your arm with some waggling in every event, but play with three friends and you get a much-needed rest, along with a more exciling competition. It plays a whole lot better than it looks!

ost of you are probably too young to remember a brilliant TV show on the BBC a lew years back. 'Superstars' had several sportspeople competing at various sports events. (not their awn) to win points (why oh why don't they bring it tack?). Orange-sucking Brian Jacks was the charipion several times and hence lent his name to his superstars-style computer game.

Unsurprisingly it's very energetic with a lot of waggling in smalls like Canoeing, 100m Sprint, Swimming (cressing fire to breathe), Arm Dips and Cycling. These more sedate events offer a brief rast. Boar Shoot (aiming a crosshair at a moving facual). A 3-D view is utilised for both Luge and Bobsleigh, with accurate steering needed to stay on the fortuous track.

Another 3-D view is used for Speed Skaling and Bale Jumping (I've done a bit of that!). Both involve left/right movement in time with your man's skales, so al least you don't get a sore

The other event is a bit of an odd un. Skidoo has you negotiating a multidirectionally scrolling, maze-like track. If plays as well as it looksbleurghil

Other than this hiccup, Winter Super Sports is a pretty sound package, though some of the events are very similar. None of them are as playable as those in Winter Games, but lan seems to like the game a lot — so if you're a bit like him (Gawd help you'l) you'll probably enjoy it mazingly this pile of old losh was Icensed from an obscure coin-op. Il aven won a ZZAP! Tacky award fremember them?). Eight athletic events involve wedgling lorwards and backwards, but they're bugged to helt. A seemingly perfect throw often goes a pathetically short distance. The graphics are so bad they're funny — unlike the supposedly comical interfade screens. This grotosque game will definitely give you the hur Creetings, amoeter-like organisms. Galte a few of yeu are confused about some of the highest scores printed kere. Take Threstabell, for imstance. Its score 'clock' only goes up to 999,999, so some cynical have written in, claiming the 3,000,000+ high score lan't possible. What, in fact, has happened is that the scorer has 'clocked' the game (reached 999,999), and added on anything scored afterwards. This is perfectly acceptable on any game — most of their store 'clocks' reach a maximum number before reverting to zero. It's a hit like the mileometer on Phil's clapped-out Metro! Keep sending your scores (clocked or not) to the Storeland, ZIAPI, Rerepress Impact, Ludlow, Shropshire SYS 13W, or DIE LIKE A post!

his platform puzzler is far-removed from the usual System 3 eoi: arcade adventure, but if it's anything like the Amiga original, it's sure to be a big hit.

As the title suggests, you control a furry little fellow but he wasn't always that way. In a variation on the Sorceror's Apprentice story, he was the nalve wizard's assistant who fiddled with a forbidderi chest and released a host of tiny Fuzzballs which quickly spread throughout the castle. In his panic, trying to stop them, the hapless apprentice mistakenly turned himself into a Fuzzball

Of course, his master was furious when he returned, and sentenced the poor lad to remain in his fuzzy form. The apprentice would only be allowed to return to his human form by returning all the Fuzzballs and the jewels they took with them.

This involves jumping around 50 platform-filled screens, collecting the gems and blasting the Fuzzballs. However, this doesn't dispose of them but merely reduces them in size temporarily. At this point they can be knocked off their platforms but if you're not quick enough they regrow into differently coloured, more intelligent Fuzzballs.

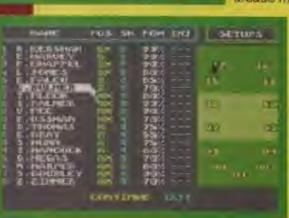

THE PROPERTY OF LANGE OF LANGE

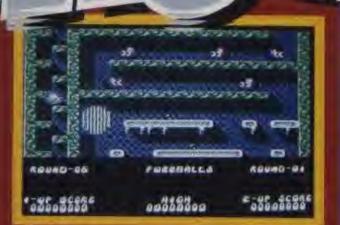

n unusual departure for the normally arcade-mad Codies is this footy management game — we can't remember them doing one before.

Nevertheless, their first-time shot looks set to hit the target. Most impressive is the arcade match sequence, with players zipping around the overheadview, flickscreen pitch. Realistically, the players on the field behave according to their statistics — some are faster; some more intelligent.

Of course, there's tactical options aplenty, including transfers, team selection, formations, training, injuries and substitutions. In addition to the league, you can go for glory in the cup when 1st Division Manager kicks off soon.

Your tricky task is made harder by a tight time limit.

Having played the Amiga game, we can say it's one of those infuriating but strangely compulsive games — and there's no reason why it shouldn't convert perfectly to the C64. Watch out for the Fuzzballs when they're released at the end of this month.

CodeMasters

his could be the hottest racer since Nigel Mansell, Based on the Codies console classic Micro Machines, it's an overheadview jobble in the mould of Hot Rod or Supercars.
This goes one better, however, with a Grand Prix championship utilising famous international tracks, including Silverstone.

Steer your car round the course Supersprintstyle with left/right to rotate, and line to accelerate. Like Mansell, you're allowed to take short outs across the grass, but hit the tyre wall and your car's wrecked. Before each race, your position on the grid is determined by a qualifying lap. In addition, you can challenge any other driver beat him in the race and you can nick his car! Trouble is, slower drivers can also challenge you and take your car.

It's certainly compulsive stuff. Most scintillating of all, though, is a Micro Machines-style two-player mode. This is a head-to-head contest with both drivers trying to get one screen ahead. This removes one of the loser's six lights and adds one strange match.

SPACE CRUSADE

Mark Crisp is the sender of these very handy Space Crusade tips, so strap on yer Terminator armour, grab a Storm Bolter and prepare to enter the fray.

Before you select your equipment on the 'Sel Up' screen, you should decide your tactics. If you're planning a lightning, guerilla-style raid without killing too many aliens, just go for Storm Bolters. But for the 'gung-ho', alien-splattering merchants among you it's best to grab the heavyduty ordnance, though this does slow your men down a bit (don't you mean a lot? - Corky).

Destroying Dreadnoughts is easier than you may imagine, even though these muthas carry two heavy weapons and a Bolter. It's simplicity itself to lure one into a doorway (especially in the Seek And Destroy mission). If you have 'Master Control' over the doors you can close 'em at a distance. If not, make sure your Commander has plenty of hit point's left and stand him outside the relevant doorway (the Dreadnought should come to him).

If you take Close Assault Blades as part of your equipment, you'll be able to throw an extra lightweapon die in hand-to-hand combat. The beauty of this is that your can attack diagonally. This manoeuvre is especially handy against Gretchins, coz they can't detend themselves when attacked from this direction.

When you enclounter a group of Greichins or Orks, the most effective way to kill 'em is to use the Assault Canmon (especially if a Targeter is attached). If the clice roll is sufficiently high, you should be able to refire a low times and hopefully

Each 'Chapter' carries at least one piece of equipment that's unique to them. Blood Angels possess a Bionic Arm (the gives the commander tramendate streingth), impenal Flats carry both Suspensors (used to regate the weight of heavy weapons) and a Combi-Weapon (e rare and prized object thants (vio weapons in one). Ultio Mannes can carry a Bio-Scanner (an advanced general nurpose) stanner), Digital Weapons (increases hand-ip-hand ability of Communder).

and a Medi-Pack (this restores all the commander's life points). So choose your team carefully.

NOSE'S AMERICAN ADVENTU

CodeMasters

Richard Beckett from York is back, and this time he ain't taking any prisoners. First we have a complete solution for Big Nose's American Adventure.

Keep lobbing the rocks around 'coz they're unlimited. Shoot everything you see, and don't pick up the potions or the beer. The beer reverses control of Big Nose, so if you do collect it head for a safe positio and wait for the effects to wear off. The potron freezes Big Nose, so here you just have to pray that nothing hits you until the effects wear off.

Level 1 — Montre Hon.

Jump along the platforms to the left of the screen, jump up until you reach a key. Collect it and go down to where the wall to the right ends, jump to the right of the wall and go up. When you reach the top of the screen, fall down between the two walls. Go right and climb up the ladder, jump over the be and go left. Climb up the ladder and go right (jumping the potion on the way), and then go up the ladder. Fall down between the walls and keep going right, so you go through the gap in the right wall.

Go right (jump the potion), go up the ladder and head left (jumping the beer). Go up and right, stand on top of the wall and jump to the right. Collect the extra life and go left to the top of the screen, now climb the ladder to the giraffe. Collect it and fall down to the long platform, now go right to the end of t screen. Climb the ladder and go left to the key (dodging the beer), collect the key. Fall down to the long platform and fall through the small gap in it. Go right and fall down the gap at

Machine Official, Transmission Official and the 1st Official Search each of 'em and take note of the three code numbers (they're different every time you play). Go to Console One and type 'open door, then enter the code found on the Machine. Official. Enter the room and run left, the bornb will now be set. Go to Console One again and type emerge', then type in the 1st Official's code

Next type 'stop motors' and type in the 1st Official's code. Finally type transmit and type in the Transmission Officer's code. The computer will ask you for the message, so type in 'OABERBYAMD'. Type 'end' to finish communication, then make your way to the top of the control tower and walk to the edge of the platform. Your submarine will appear and the enemy sub will explode (har, har) - now sit back and watch what happens.

THE SIMPSONS

Following on from the tips for Level One printed a couple of issues ago, David Ewing from Co Limerick provides some more help for those of you stuck in Springfield.

Level 2 — Springfield Shopping Mall

 There are only 12 hats lying around, so you need to knock another 12 off people's heads.

Make sure you use the X-Ray specs before you jump on a person's head, if they're not mutants you'll lose half a life.

Standing on litter bins and jumping vertically reveals coins.

A few screens into the level there's some tricky jumping to do over moving platforms suspended over a pit. THIS CAN BE AVOIDED - jump onto the second moving platform and jump vertically three times. The platform will rise to the top of the screen and carry you to the edge of the pit.

The shopping mall consists of four floors, at the end of each floor is a baddle that Bart must defeat to progress.

Place 1 -Clyde: Use the litter bin to avoid his yellow Frisbees. Jump on his bonce five times to Place 2 - The Bly Sheet Jump on the occupant's heads ion times to defeat him. Only jump on him from behind though.

Place 2 - Poe Manicion: Disappears and reappear. Tricky to beat because there are no litter bins to jump on. When he appears, jump over his misalle and jump onto his need. Run to the far right or far left of the screen and well until ha reappears, repeat procedure until he's dead.

There is the store of the drops sulfcases on your nut from a great height. Bart must jump on the suitneses to send them back up to her. Hit her jen times and you're on your way to Level Three.

Lange 3 — Managar Lange This is a short level, and one of the estrest to Watch out for the little girl sitting over the pool of water, she likes little darts at you with uncarny accuracy. To set its of her you must hit the target on her right with your slingshot.

The Dizzy Doors game is quite easy, once you

The Dizzy Doors game is quite easy, once you know the order Imagine the doors are numbered one to nine in the following order:

You must open the doors in numerical order. But if there's no door number five, just go onto number six (and so on). After opening door nine (or the next highest one), go back to door one and repeat the process. Nine balloons are your reward for completing it.

 On the jumps over the organ pipes, only use the second and sixth pipe as these are the easiest.

Watch out for the small acrobats, just jump over them while they're spinning along the ground.

at the first tent outside the Funhouse exit. Just keep scrolling the tent on and then off the screen, a new balloon will appear each time.

The jumps across the Big Wheel are among the tricklest in the whole game. Jump on the roof of the tent, and from there onto the first carriage. Go to the far left of the first carriage (as close to the edge as possible), and face right. Now comes the tricky bit hold down the fire button and jump to the right. With a birroy luck you'll land on the second carriage (which doubles as a trampoline), and bounce safely to the other side. Give yourself a big pat on the back if you make it across.

Sideshow Bob's easy to beat if you have Lise helping you, Just stand at the far left of the screen and let Lisa do the rest.

There's a secret coin room inside the Furthouse. Drop onto a hidden platform in the big clown's mouth from the screen above (drop off the right-hand side of the highest platform on the left). When on this hidden platform jump straight up to enter the bonus screen.

Level 4 — Spring/fold Netwest Mistory Misselms This level may have the trest graphics in the

This level may have the trest graphics in the entire game, but it's thin hardest as far as jumping is concerned.

To get bonuses out of the glass cases, jumin on the glass three times.

fou can stand on the bottom ledge of every picture trame (this is more useful than you might think).

Be careful of pictures leaturing Zebloid mutants, they come to life if Bart stands too close to them.

The laser beams are easier to pass than you may think as long as Bart doesn't jump, only the beam on the bottom kills,

The small beetles in the Tropical Forest home in on Bart, so keep moving.

You can jump on the horizontal branches of the trees.

The river can only be crossed by jumping on the crocodiles. Only jump on the first crocodile when it starts moving.

The monkey only fires coconuts along three levels. Jump over the monkey while it's firing its bottom coconut.

Don't rush when trying to pass the spiders, it's easy to make stupid mistakes.

Use the Jebediah head of invincibility to get the exit sign on the left of the glass case (warning: invincibility only lasts about five seconds, and there's no warning before it goes).

You must now enter the Egyptian pyramid via a tricky tunnel of disappearing red platforms. The sequence is:

lorward Long Jump ferward Short jump back Long jump back Long jump back Long jump ferward

Long jump forward — and you can only jump on the red strips:

The next bit is marginally easier. You have to jump on the boulders as soon as they appear, or the one you're standing on will disappear. Just jump the snakes.

You'll now be on a screen with three statues, a sarcophagus and loadsa beetles. At the loot of each statue is an invisible platform, so stand under the left-hand statue and jump on the platform. Ankhis will appear on each statue. When one appears above your head, jump to pick it up. After about seven ankhis the screen will shake and you'll be able to move on.

You must now defeat a Mummy. As soon as the Mummy appears, run left and jump on the hidden platform at the far left of the screen. You're now safe from the Mummy's fire. Jump on his head and steer Bart to land on the hidden platform. Repeat until dead, but beware 'coz if the Mummy leaves the screen on the left a new 'un will appear on the right. So keep the same Mummy on the screen at all times, jumping on his head five times to kill 'im.

Next is probably the hardest jump in the game. It consists of a river of lava flowing from the top of the screen to the bottom, and a log that moves from the background to the foreground. Needless to say it

Mr Gibbins from Twerton in Avon, rang up to ask about a possible POKE for the recently released Silent Service to give infinite torpedoes — the game contains a flaw whereby you don't have enough ammunition to complete later levels.

The ZZAP! crew's grasp of reality is virtually nonexistent at the best of times, but, as they discovered during a visit to Nottingham's Logend Quest, this is not a handicap when it comes to exploring the mindbending world of virtual reality. Steve 'In A World Of His Own' Shields reports.

I nearly make it too, but just as I'm reaching the relative safety of a group of colossal pillars a giant pterodactyl swoops down and, gripping me tightly in its outstretched talons, bears me aloft towards the distant stars.

Corky and lan are having a bit of a two-man tussle themselves, I notice incongruously, as the enormous beast wings its way even higher above the ground. Beneath me, I just have time to observe Phil as he gazes skywards with what I would swear was a smirking expression on his face. Aaaarrghl My throaty scream as the pterodactyl releases me is both heart-felt and involuntary, the faint echoes of it ringing in my ears as I plummet helplessly towards my inevitable doom....

Back to reality

No, I haven't been sampling the latest designer drug to hit the market; that was my first 'hands-on' experience of a Virtual Reality system, invited to Nottingham by a company called Virtual Reality Design & Leisure Ltd., I and the other three ZZAPlers set out to investigate this latest technological breakthrough - one which not only could, but even looks likely to change the way we play computer games forever

Set up in January of this year, the company pride themselves on being the first in The World to provide Jo Public with easy access to a fully interactive adventure played in a virtual reality environment. The brain-child of a trio of young entrepreneurs, Legend Quest began as something of a hobby and quickly evolved into an exciting, lucrative enterprise that is poised to spawn franchises (aster than McDonalds)

Justin Webster and brothers Andy and Paul

Resembling some kind of turn-ofthe-century torture instrument, the Virtual Reality halmet is surprisingly comfortable once fitted. Just don't expect a comfy chair, too!

Legend Quest
This lantasy roleplaying
adventure takes place in the virtually real world of Knelda-Roth, There's a well-written (and pertinentl) story which sets the scene nicely, but it's too involved to print here so you'll have to wait till you visit the centre for a copy of the handbook:

Three main character types are available; Wizard, Thief and Warnor Each offers various advantages, the best combination (in a four-player adventure) probably being two Warriors, a Thief and a Wizard, Choose which sex you'd like to be, fill in the personal details (height, facial features, even eye colour!), pick up your smart key and away you

The object here is to: 1), survive as long as possible, 2), cooperate with your fellow adventurers AND computer-generated characters to solve puzzles and avoid traps, etc. 3), locate and defeat the ten different monsters which represent different lacets of an evil god, and, 4), enjoy yourself!
The last one is certainly easy to achieve, whether you live a long and happy life or not And, as the game is constantly being updated and expanded, completing it will prove an impossible task. An enormous challenge that takes about five to ten minutes to get to grips with, this is one game you genuinely WILL want to play again and again. And again!

Smith first became interested in virtual reality as far back as 1986. Good friends for many years, it was natural step for them to pitch in together and make their pastimes start paying. A gamble? Perhaps. B once you've experienced a trip into the virtual realit realm, you'll find that my 'designer drug' analogy wasn't so far off — the temptation to have another go is almost overwhelming!

Back to the future

So what happens now? Since it opened in January, Nottingham's Legend Quest — situated in a trendy shopping street ourside the town centre — has achieved a client base of 3,500 members. And new game treaks are signing up every week! 'London's next on the list, smiles Mandy Martin, the company's cheerful spokesperson revealingly. If there's a 'list', BIG plans must be afoot. 'We will then go on to award franchises to centres in other UK cities...' yeah, then let me guess, the Whole World? Could be, as if happens, because the company, in association with W-industries (the firm that provide all the software and hardware support) have patented their designs, copyrighted the programs and generally sewn the entire deal up very nicely indeed.

Once all the little teething troubles have been troned out (and there were very few of those in evidence the wet Wednesday that we visited), the company plan to initialise a training program and tranchise scheme that really could culminate in a Legend Quest centre springing up in every high street. Mandy explains:

We couldn't get planning permission for this

In fact, the grey men from the Council couldn't have been more wrong. Although a huge plateglass window opens right onto the street (allowing curious bypassers the chance to confuse themselves further), Legend Quest is more like a well-ordered club-house than anything else. There is a sitting area behind the front desk where members can — are in fact encouraged to — congregate and discuss tactics while awaiting their turn. Parties are organised where Questers come (often in full costume) to have a few drinks, relax and relate to fellow members wild tales of their adventures... in a civilised lashion, of course!

Back to basics

To anyone who's never seen or heard anything about virtual reality, this probably sounds like a lot of nonsense hyped up as yet another way in which to fleece the kids of their pocket money. Well you can forget hard-shelled amphibians and muscle-bound Yankee wrestlers because THIS IS SOMETHING COMPLETELY DIFFERENT!

Once you've entered the magnetic ring—disguised as gnarly tree-trunks in the Nottingham centre—and fastened the odd helmet-comegoggles over your head, expect the unexpected. I fully expected to be impressed with the experience, what I wasn't expecting was to be completely blown away by it! Two ten-minute sessions on each of the two 'games' that Legend Quest have running left me exhibitarated, sweaty and hungry for more

This is how it works: inside the 'helmet' are a pair of tiny TV monitors which are positioned directly before your eyes. Each screen depicts a slightly different angled perspective of a computer-generated landscape and, because the angles are precisely correct, what you see is an environment which appears in three dimensions. But the clever bit comes when you move your head! Look left, right, up, down, any which way you want — even crouching down or standing on tip-loes alters your perspective accordingly!

Although a large part of the experience, what you see is by no means all of what you get. A microphone relays your excited prattle to the other players (hilariously distonling your voice according to the type of character you're playing) white headphones allow you to listen to them. But it's not just your party members that you hear, for practically everything that can make a sound does. Walk past a flaming brand brackated to a wall and marvel as it was completely fascinated: I experimented for ages, moving my virtual hand into view rotating it in various directions — It accurately followed my every movement. Then I began to get my bearings in the virtual world of Dactyl.

Spotting one of my competitors on a distant platform, I almed my our and fired. PLOPI My builet flew in a partect parabola falling short by a mile. This wasn't going to be easy. I decided to venture downstairs to the main combat arena. Sneaking up on a hapless competitor. I stuck my our in his back and short him in cold blood! Turn around Mr Blue, said a deep voice, so I did, and got blasted to smithercens! Several deaths and kills later, it was all over.

Taking off my helmet, I was none too pleased to see some tolks at the window, pointing and laughing but I was determined to try out the challenge of Legend Quest. I chose to be a dwarf, armed with a huge axe, carried on my back. According to my comfades I also had a gruff low-pitched rumble of a voice, though I couldn't hear it myself.

Being an AD&D fan, the game was like a

Being an AD&D fan, the game was like a dream come true. Even thought in the virtual world. I felt the need for self-preservation as my colleagues hacked into skeletons and goblins. Yes, I actually felt fear — and It wasn't virtual! Even going down steep staircases gave me a feeling of vertigo. On the negative side, I did have some trouble unsheathing my weapons, and my axe was so huge I had to hold it high and to the side to prevent it obscuring my view!

The best bit was smashing down a locked door when the shaky-handed (an couldn't get his key in the hole. This game's a paradise for those with a destructive bent

Apparently white all this was happening. Mandy was screaming in my ear, telling me what to do — but I didn't hear her. I was so involved in my quest. It was with regret that I finally removed my headset and vantured back into the real world.

Threves are stranged creatures in the real world they wear striped jerseys and face masks, break into your house, pinch your valuables, crap on your carpets then lade away into the night. Put 'em into a fantasy roleplaying environment and they suddenly become good guys, opening locked doors, detecting hidden traps, helping old ladies across the road — the RPG genre could've been invented by Robert Maxwell's PR, mant As you've probably guessed I played the thief, an Elven geezer with all-seeing eyes and a taste for adventure.

Being an avid AD&D bull and computer adventure freak I was really looking forward to Legend Quest, but it didn't entirely hit the mark. The concept and execution are AMAZING — the first time I saw a skeleton assemble itself in front of me and try to hack MY flesh away I nearly died! When I tried hacking him though, the screen update was so slow all I could do was push my dagger back and forth at a snail's pace. Intricate combat is impossible at present, but a new-improved, fasterupdating system has been promised for the not-too-distant future. Obviously a game like Legend Quest needs the running commentary from a staff member, but that's exactly what you DON'T want in an adventure if it were a C64 game it's the sort where you'd sit in front of it for hours at a time, which is impossible with virtual reality.

Perhaps the main problem with Legend Ouest is that the subject matter takes the software beyond its limitations. Until the screen update improves, fantasy-style swords and sorcery games will never reach their true potential. Conversely the shoot-'emup blaster Dactyl played really well — the torthcoming sci-fi opus will be BLINDING! Don't let this put you off playing Legend Ouest, though — virtual reality has a long way to go before it lives up to its name, but it's still one hell of an experience!

crackles in your lug-hole, and the 'clangs' which resound when you wallop a skeleton's shield in combat simply have to be heard to be believed!

Back to the game in hand

The Nottingham centre has two very different, but equally excellent, games up and running (see the separate boxed sections); a sci-fi shoot-'em-up (Dactyl Nightmare) and a lantasy role-playing adventure (Legend Quest itself). Despite their dissimilar approaches to gameplay, both respond to the same movement and, to a certain extent, combat commands — issued to the system via a special joystick.

• Is this a dagger I see before me? Well it might look like one to you, matey, but from this angle it resembles a small piece of plastic with a couple of buttons on it!

A comfortable handheld affair, the joystick connects to a back-pack which, in turn, is plugged into the magnetic ring which surrounds the player. Boasting both a trigger 'fire' button, and a 'movement' button (accessed via the thumb), this is your lifeline when 'in' the virtual world... don't drop it!

To move (in either scenario) look in the direction you want to go, then hold down the thumb button. Hey presto, you're walking! Release it to stop, look around, pick a new direction (including 'up' and 'down' if stairs or ladders are available) then press it again. Couldn't be simpler. They toyed with the idea of having two movement speeds (walk and run), but in practice this proved a tad too confusing for novices to get to grips with.

The trigger is, in Dactyl Nightmare at least, just that; a trigger. Hold the joystick in front of you and you'll see you're gripping a space-age blaster. Aim it just as you would an air pistol, pull the trigger, and POWI it takes a few seconds to reload after each shot, mind, so if you miss the blighter make a run for it before your enemy takes advantage of the fact...

The Legend Quest adventure utilises the trigger button in a slightly different fashion. Whichever character you choose to play will begin the game with a dagger attached to his/her belt. To draw your weapon guide the joystick to the general violnity of your right hip, a "sching!" sound indicates that your weapon has been drawn — when you bring your hand back up you'll see the knife positioned firmly in your fist.

 Take that! A dwarf strikes out and lands a mighty blow against his loe. Ooh, that's so satisfying! Keep your trigger depressed during combat to avoid accidentally re-sheathing your blade at an inopportune moment.

Back to the cut and thrust

Stab foes just as you would Jeremy Beadle if you met him in a dark alley (and you just happened to be carrying a rubber knife!) and remember, it's Aaagh get off me you little bastitch, ha, ha let's see how you like cold steel up yer jacksie. Take that, and that, I'll teach you to leap at brave warriors from darkened corners. Oh ...

erm sorry readers I was just in the middle of Legend Quest, the virtual reality version of fantasy roleplaying. Being a liberally minded chap, (and after a stap round the head from Mandy, our guide) I chose to play a female Elf warrior.

The helmet linking the player to the computer leels strange at first, but you soon adjust to the weight. What takes longer to get used to is the restricted vision and the method of movement. But once you sort it all out you're free to hack, slash and blow creatures apart to until the cows come home (or your cash runs out). Possibly the weirdest thing is hearing your comrades' computer-distorted voices: Steve, Phil and Ian sounded like they were tripping on hellum (though I must've sounded the same to them).

The only bad thing about the game is the 'feeling a prat' factor. You can see a horde of Goblins charging toward you, but all anyone outside sees is some twill energetically flinging their arms around. Is virtual reality totally convincing?... not quite, but it's damned close. I strongly recommend you try it at least once in your life.

Dear Miss Wholash

What a joy it is to see an old classic like Trashman (complete with 14-minute loader, I hope) appearing on this month's Megatape. Being a bit older than your average ZZAPI reader (I'm 23, had a C64 since 1983, and have been reading ZZAP! since 1985), it takes me bact to my school days, when Creatures were probably just something the Rowlands Bros doodled in their hooks, when they should have been learning French. Ah, those were the days. If possible, let's see some more old classics, such as Chinese Juggler, Mr Wimpy and, of course, the legendary Bugaboo The Flea. If nothing else, it would show the newer 64 owners what games used to be like all those years ago, when most of them were probably still learning to read

Bob

PS. Any chance of a date? Or maybe with your alter-ego Lucy She looks so sweet!

Lucy says you're obviously too old for her, but I prefer experience. As for really crusty games, we'll only ever publish them if they compare favourably with modern-day releases: classics like Paradroid and Gribbly's Day Out, for example. Lash

QUESTION TIME

May I congratulate you on your magazine, most of it's excellent, except some of the childish remarks dotted throughout. Please could you answer some of my questions?

1. What's the best basketball game available for the C64?

2. Which is the best game out of Budokan (disk), Creatures 2, or Space Crusade? 3. Are there any new cartridge games planned?

4. Will Streetlighter 2 beconverted to the C64, if so, when and by who?

5. Why such an increase in price and not in the number of pages?

6. Is it possible to get stereo sound out of the C64, if so how?

7. Are there any plans to release Time Mochine, North & South and Predator 2 on budget soon?

Long live ZZAP! may it grow and prosper.

Paul Whitaker, Stamford Bridge, York.

PS. Can we have more demos and/or better full games on the Megatapes?

I'm writing to ask (tell) you to do a programming feature for us techies out here.

Since the main advantage of computer over console is the keyboard (neverl); I think it's absolutely suicidal for you (a C64 mag) not to have this feature.

It would have programming tips, listings in BASIC and assembly language, graphics (spriles and background), music and sound effects. Please consider my point and act on it. Yours techingly (made-up word)

I'm not much of a technical wizard, but we'll see what the Oracle says after the results of the readers survey printed last ish. If enough readers want one, then one will materialise... Besh

2. They're all darn good, but Creatures 2 is my favourite, "coz I like the torture!

3. No, it looks like carts are finally finished.

4. If it is, you can be sure we'll let ya know but as yet, no one plans to ... 5. Rising paper costs, caused by people using loads of paper - including you to ask this question

7. Predator 2 should be soon.

Here are those inevitable questions:

How much does a C64 disk drive cost?

2. I am a keen programmer, but I do not have a clue about any of it except BASIC programs. Oh please, please can you help me? NB. I would like to know about graphic programming too.

3. On an instruction sheet for CodeMasters'

International Rugby Simulator I have noticed a program called Creations advertised. Why have I no seen it in any software shops?

4. What is your favourite C64 platform game? And why?

5. Can you print this letter?

Andrew Humphrey, Devon

PS. If you don't print this I'll camp outside your front door until you do! (Serious threat!!)

Please could you cottact Flair Software and ask 'em to put Elvira IIn C64 cartridge.

I've written to them nyself but you guys would probably have more clut (especially if you send Miss W and Bash round too persuade them!) I know they were considering doing the first game on cart, but nothing appeared. So, how about a cartridge, Flair?

Also, if there are any dimwits out there thinking of flogging their trusty old 64 for a crappy console then please rememberthat consoles have absolutely chronic sound chips compared to good old SID. Plus the games last longer on the 64, too!

On a more productive side, I notice that Mark Beese of Bristol wrote n last ish and wanted to know about a couple of games on the 64. Well 1 have a copy of the game Orc Attack which I picked up for 79p in a local stationery shop last year (Interesting, huh?). The game itself is quite a good laugh with you controlling a knight who drops rocks and burning oil on some green dudes who try to overrun your battlements (oo-er)!

What's the problem with Lemmings anyway? The Speccy can do the game okay, and that hasn't even got any hardware sprites! Haven't the programmers heard of interrupts?

The Amiga's only got 16 hardware sprites (compared to the 64's 8) so how did it cope? Yes, I know it's a much more powerful machine, but Lemmings needs topside of 100 (surely?) sprites.

I've been a 64-er for seven years now, and had a Speccy before then, iso PLEASE could you 64 mags leave the poor olld rubber keyboard alone?! At least it can do vector graphics a lot better than the grinding, painfully slow 'n' jerky 64 (wot no

Ah well, I'll clear off mow. If this letter's too long to print, just print some; bits of it! (Or make it Letter Of The Month!)

I can't quite follow your comments on the C65, but as the Oraclile Of Zaktar told me the labled machine isn't i likely to appear in the future, who cares?

PPPPPS. What ever happened to Wrath Of The Demon? Did I miss it? Where can I get this rather groovy cartridge from?

PPPPPPS. Can software companies use cartridges? No-one would object to paying the same price for a cart as they would for a disk, and the cart can make use of up to 1/2 meg of memory too.

Is there any reason why the C64 can't have more memory than 1/2 meg on cartridge? The 6502's addressing modes should be able to handle it! (Px7)S. Why was Gauntlet II so slow and crappy on the 647 is III any good? is it out yet? (Px8)S. Why do the 64 versions of games take ages longer to release than any other games format? It's ridiculous! A bit like this letter!

 Like many software houses, Flair reckon it's too much of a commercial risk to put Elvira II on cart. The reason is that if a game does well on disk or cassette, extra copies can easily be produced to meet the demand. In the case of carts, they have to be manufactured in bigger bulk than Phil - and if they don't all sell, the software house loses loads of money.

CICKED INTO TOUCH

Dear Miss Whiplash

I have some questions to ask you:

At my mate's house I saw an old copy of ZZAP! with news of a Kick Off 2 cart. Will this still be released? If so, when?

2. I have heard news about Sensible Soccer on the Amiga. Is it coming out on the 64? If it is, when and how much?

3. I have got Lotus 1 and it's totally amazing. When is Lotus 2 coming out on the 647

4. What is the best boxing game on the 64 and how much is it?

5. Do you think the Game Gear and Super Nintendo are any good? I also have to say that I think the C64 is going a bit downhill. The only decent games are the old ones. The new ones are usually rated at about 35°

I'd like to complain about Software City. I sent off for Creatures and the game arrived. I used the tip and got really far but the game suddenly just stopped. I reloaded the game over and over again and I got the same result. I sent the game back to Software City and guess what? No reply! I sent a letter to them and guess what — still no reply. What's wrong with them? I'd like my game or my money back — £7.50 is a lot to an eleven-year-old, weep, weep.

John Hayward, Ringwood, Hants

 1. Sadly not — a tearful Footy Phil reckoned it would have been great

No plans for it at the moment — but don't tell Phil! 3. It isn't.

4. Phil reckons it's Barry McGuigan's World Championship Boxing, but as it's been deleted for yonks, you'll have to scour car bool sales etc.

The technical boffins here reckon the Game Gear's okay, but hugely inferior to the (cheaper) Atari Lynx. As for the Super Nintendo, if you fancy splashing out £40+ per game, you're welcome to it!

The C64 isn't going downhill, there's still plenty of high-quality software being released: check out Creatures 21

Try ringing Software City - and it that doesn't work, ring your local Trading Standards office for Lash

I am writing to you in an attempt to share my views on the supreme institution that is ZZAP! 64. As many people have stated, ZZAP! has gone through an evolution as editors came and went, the most recent being the infamous Issue 82. The May issue's letters page was dominated with letters mourning the loss of direction of ZZAP!, while the Letter Of The Month accolade being awarded to a missive entitled 'Ooh! I like it'

I am quite indifferent to all of these sweeping changes in ZZAPI. I believe marty other long-time readers feel the changes were nice, but the magazine is basically the same, although thankfully you took readers' advice and gave the innuendo the heave-ho.

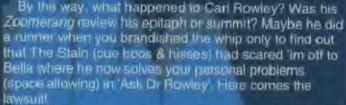

Also, congrais on putting in the poster — a nice addition! I particularly liked the tootball and wrestling specials, although you left out one wrestling game! 1987's Cage Match from Mastertronic

By the way, is Bash really The Stain in disguise, as you revealed in the alorementioned letter, 'Ooh! I like it', that he (it?) would be taking the halm of a new adventure section which new seems to be in the 'capable hands' of Bash?

Now, if you're still with me, some praise and some complaints ('here we go...', sighs the entire ZZAPI readership). First, the praise. After a brief lapse in game quality, namely Megatape 28 (due, I believe, to the drying up of the Andy Braybrook game source). The tapes are improving. However, I was furious after purchasing Issue 85. The promised Emilyn Hughes Soccar was a rip-off: two-minute matches... come on! That was nothing more than a demo, and not the 'yours to keep for free!!!... scortchin' soccar game' as promised. This special ZZAP! version that had Tape Worm frothing at the mouth was a con, plain and simple, I knew it was too good to be true...

The only complaint I have is about the 100% colour issue (well actually two) are as follows. The Letterz page is now practically unreadable with 'delicious' pictures of Y-Fronts, squirrels and the like with psychedelic backgrounds adding to the confusion. Also, it adds considerably to the price: what was IRE3.10 here, is now IRE3.53!

Question time now. You knew it had to come sometime!

1. When is System 3's 'Lemmings-beater' Silly Putty.

hitting the shelves?

2. All the PD File pages are very interesting, but are there. any C64 PD distributors that you know of in Dublin or

3. Any idea who has the Allen 3 licence? Also Balman Returns? Hopefully someone who can do a good job,

4. How about a Top 100 chart or Top 200, beating CF to a quivering pulp?

Well, that's about it, hope this provides some interesting reading, even it isn't printed Keep up the good work

Derek Scally, Dublin 5

Yes, even I must admit the innuendo was over the top and has now been locked firmly in the

I too enjoyed the wrestling feature, and Phil says he's sorry he missed Cage Match — then again, it was so awful...

What I must really apologise for is the confusion over Emlyn Hughes. We didn't mean to mislead anyone, but whoever wrote the hype on the Next Month page obviously got a bit carried away - don't we all sometimes?

I have my suspicions about Bash, but even I could never believe he was that weedy twerp,

The Stain — a twerp, yes; weedy, no!

Most people feel a full-colour ZZAP! is worth the extra cost, especially for all those huge screenshot maps in the tips section. We believe our readers deserve better than dull grey pages — the C64 is a vibrant, colourful computer, and the design of ZZAP! reflects that fact. By the way, I'm told CF have increased their cover price but still have their mono section!

No, Mr Rowley is not a doctor (his medical knowledge only extends to basic bodily functions) and has had no problems since joining our sister title, N-FORCE — the mag for Nintendo games

1. It ain't. System 3 believe if they're going to do something, they should do it well. Sadly they decided it wouldn't be possible to accurately convent the Amiga game and are instead concentrating on other products, including the forthcoming C64 version of the excellent Fuzzbail.

2. We don't know of any, but you can always get stuff from the English PD distributors.

3. Mirrorsoft's Imageworks label had the rights for Allens 3. After the collapse of the Maxwell empire Mirrorsoft was bought by top Nintendo publisher, Acclaim. They have yet to decide whether to release Aliens 3 and Devious Designs on the C64.

 As you can see, ZZAP! now features the Gallup software chart — easily the most reliable around.

LOADS OF HASSLI

Dear Bash

Remember way back in April, Megatape No 27. Well the first game Uridium wouldn't load (the others were fine). So I sent it back to Spool Duplication, it came back and the same thing happened again, and then I sent that back and the same again.

I have got a head-alignment kit and that seen okay, I've tried cleaning the head, but the tape won't even load on a friend's machine.

is there something else I could do? Has anyo else had this problem? Or am I just really unlucky?

D Brotherton, Stoke-On-Trent, Staffs

It sounds like you're just plain unlucky! After a few whacks with the back of my axe. the Ed's promised to send you a replacement But other readers, be warned: we don't have many old Megatapes in the office. If yours won't work, keep hassling the duplicators.

NO MORE RUDE BOOBS!

Dear Miss Whiplash

I think it's disgraceful the way innuendo is being used in this mag to gain cheap laughs. It has offended me so much I have a throbbing head perhaps this is due to the um, 'graceful' Oli Frey drawing of you on the scores page!

Anyway, the footy games feature was excellent. Will there be more in the same mould? 3-D car sims/games might be a good

I would like to say that Turrican, while being momentous achievement on the C64, is not good value for money. I handed over my cash for it when it was first released. At first I was bowled over by the enormity of it all, but much my dismay I completed it on my second go; at least I would have done if it was all there. The message read: 'Loading Level 4-2', and the tay finished. The same thing happened to the replacement copy. Do you or Bash know why? didn't bother getting a third copy, as the game was obviously too easy and I went back to Dropzone (my fave game) which has to be the most frenetic game of all time.

Where can I get a copy of The Sentinel from (originally by Firebitd)? Is it really the perfect game, and if so, why doesn't anyone I know ov a copy?

To add to the sexism debate, I think that it's not just women who are portrayed wrongly inadvertising; all the men seem to have huge bulging biceps and trousers, and know lots about wielding their weapons. Not everyone ca be like me, so this sets false goals for impressionable young boys.

Well, you can wake up now. Party on.

Charles Radmell, Tunbridge Wells, Kent

PS. Where's Rockford? Persuade him to come back or I won't come and give you a good hiding! Now there's a threat!

I agree, Turrican's not hard enough. Did you try turning the tape over to load the res of it? The Sentinel IS hard enough, but has been deleted for ages.

I think boys should know how to wield their weapons, so these ads are obviously very educational.

Sorry I couldn't print your joke, a lot of people would be offereded. I thought is was dead funny!

ALIENS VOTE C64 TOPS!

Dear Miss Whiplash

probably deserve a few strokes for writing this letter, but I think I'll riskk It!

1. My daughter and I both enjoy your magazine and look forward to seteing the new edition each month. But why do we ALWAYS have trouble loading the Megatape? It seems one side loads perfectly whilst the other side appears to be loading, then crashes. This happens every issue without fail, and constant azimuth adjustments only result in other games not loading and consequently having to adjust it back again (hand me another tabliet).

Even though the cower tapes are 'free' most. people, I am sure, purchase your magazine not just for the mag itself but for the freebie. What a disappointment when that's all it's worth!

Now that I've got it out (of my system), I would appreciate your comments on this matter: 2. Why are new releases of C64 games hard to find in shops? Is Stockport being forgotten? (Shouldn't it be?) At the time of writing, we still await Steg The Slug, DJ Puff's Volcanic Capers, Alien World, Beavers etc etc.

UBLIC ACCLAIM

THE PRICE OF FASHIOI

Oh why, oh why oh why (oh no!) has the price of my favourite monthly read increased? Unfortunately for me, the price of ZZAPI has now exceeded my pay allowance for reading material and at IRC3 53 it has exceeded the price of Vogue by one pence. Can I please have my magazine for young unemployed programmers in college doing BSc in computers back please?

Enough of my childish quibbling, I am an adult after all (I think). Here are some intround questions which may involve some research... NOT!

Will Barman Returns be released by Ocean with Zach Townsend and Andrew Sleigh?

ay we have some more Tips Plus sections for cheats on old masters and classics?

3. Why did a Gold Medal winner in Issue 86 called Chuck Rock only receive a one-page review when such games are given two and sometimes three pages?

4. How many times have I written to you previously?

These and other questions are the key to the Universe so answer hem carefully (ie please, please, please answer my letter).

They haven't decided yet.

2. Not in the very near future.

4. One, two, erm... I can't keep count!

Are aliens lifting new games off the shelves overnight and taking them back to planet Zabadox or are publishers slow in issuing new titles? I believe it's the aliens, myself!

3. Howzabout C64 games being featured on the next Gamesmaster TV series instead of always showing off the expensive, spoiled brats' Sega & Nintendo, more-money-than-sense games? Surely some of the better C64 graphic games like Creatures, Addams Family or Bod Squad could be included (I don't think the old faithful C64 received a mention last series).

Oh, well, have to close now as my right hand's going numb (with all the writing).

Hope you may consider printing this letter (it would be a first!).

Love ya Lashes.

about the alien conspiracy, but had to keep quiet in case everyone thought me insane. All those games are available apart from Beavers. Complain to your local software shops mmediately!

3. Darn right, and that weedy Dominic Diamond blokey thinks he knows about games. Surely if the show covered the popular 8-bit computers it'd get more viewers?!

I was reading your review on the boxing and wrestling games and for Pro Boxing Simulator. You said that it lacked a two-player option. I have the game and it annoyed me because the game has a two-player option.

Mark (The King) Brown, Childwall, Liverpool.

ased on one of my all-time favourite Schwarzenegger movies. Total Recall tells the tale of a trip to Mars that went horribly wrong. Doug Quaid, a mining engineer, is the chap with a big problem. After dreams of being a secret agent on Mars, Quaid takes a trip to Rekall (a company specialising in brain-implanted holidays). Here he plans to pay for a Mars-based holiday, but finds instead that he's really a secret agent called Hauser. His mind was wiped when he learned too much about the plans of his boss, the villainous Cohaaggen.

The game starts with Quaid contacting a pal to gain clues to his real identity Somewhere in the maze of platforms is a suitcase with vital clues and a video message from Hauser, So leap around and avoid or destroy the bad guys, led by the despicable Richter. Found in crates, the objects Quald needs to exit Level One include oxygen bottles, special weapons and an icon that increases the hero's strength. Once Quaid escapes he leaps into a Johnny Cab and races along the highway in a vain attempt to shake off Richter and Co. The demolition derby moves horizontally across the screen, and is viewed from above.

Use the brakes, you idiot!

Level Three is a similar 'I like driving in my car' scene: this time Quaid's on Mars and has met up with Melina, a female resistance member. Richter and pals haven't given up yet, and so the chase is on as the player controls a cab driven by a mutant named Benny.

The final level's similar to the first (le a platform shooty thing): Quaid must first find Kuato (the resistance leader) and discover the whereabouts of an alien machine. This produces free oxygen — at the moment Cohaaggen's charging the population high prices for the air they breathe. It's up to Quaid to start the machine and end Cohaaggen's reign of terror. The film is one of my all time faves. I've seen it to times to date (sad, isn't it? — Ed), and I must say the pixellised version's a corker. I wasn't working on ZZAP! when Stu. Phil and Rob lirst reviewed the game, so I didn't really know what to expect. There's nothing new in the design of the game, indeed two old faves are present: the platform blaster and the 'screech around' car chase. Background graphics are a tad on the blocky side but the character sprites are neatly drawn and well animated. The sound's also pretty impressive with a choice of pounding soundtrack or spot effects. So get ready for the ride of your life. 'Nulf said.

n the year 2003 over one lifth of the planet's population will be addicted to narcotics, thus the power of the drug dealers will increase beyond measure. But there's a silver lining to this particular black cloud: all the nations of the world have banded together and sent their best two policemen to serve in an elite anti-drugs force called the Narco Police.

Five years of training and preparation are about to come together in the biggest drugs bust ever. The location of the drug dealers HQ, known as the Narco Processing Centre, is a small island off the coast of Colombia.

So the rozzers head off to kick some drug-producer ass. But not before loading up with plenty of ordnance, and rest assured there's a fair bit to choose from. There's two types of bullets, three different missifes, some vital demolition equipment, a medical kit, teleport system and a bulletproof vest. So choose well and prepare to send your three teams into the fray, and

Once you've locked and loaded, a map of the island appears, enabling a choice of five tunnels leading into the base — though this is pointless presentation as they all look and play the same. You control each member of the teams as they travel through dark and dank passages, searching for the Central Processing Laboratory (ahh, that's why they carry the explosives).

The drug dealers ain't going to let your lads ruin their day, so they send their own troops to wipe out the intruders. Be wary 'coz ammo is limited, so choose your targets carefully and wait until you see the whites of their eyes (unless they're tightly shut).

The risk here, of course, is death by lead poisoning, but this is where both the flak jacket and medical kits come in handy. Also you can use the Personal Intercom Unit to swap between teams, fire missiles, use the medical kit, set explosives etc. Hurry up, you haven't got all day to reach your target and blow it sky high.

You'll all know by now that I'm a closet psycho who enjoys nothing more than a birrov computerised violence, and Narco Police delivers it in spades. The buillets certainly fly around: even in the safety of your own home, a brown-trouser attack was never quite so assured. But after a few more plays, Narco Police is great fun. Graphically the game's good, some of the sprites are a tad porky but I'm sure we can lorgive that. A budgel price tag assures that Narco Police is worth purchasing.

limey, it only seems like yesterday whe this platform romp first came into the office. Not long after, it was released o the compilation cartridge accompanying the il fated GS console (keyboardless C64).

Dr Franz Dandruff is the flaky villain of the piece, having kidnapped a girl named Pearly. The dirty old man wants her bodily juices to reverse the ageing effects of a failed immortality experiment. Naturally, Pearly's boyfriend, Flimbo, is none too pleased about this arrangement and sets out to beat Dandru and get his girly back.

The horizontally scrolling action has similarities with the Thalamus classic Hawkeye, with Flimbo running left/right, leaping between platforms and blasting away at tough hideous lorture devices by their sadistic capters. But before Clyde can reach each of three Fuzzies, he must get through two horizontally scrolling stages, leaping on platforms and battling the weird residents with his Droopy bullets and Flery Throat Flamer (by holding down fire). This is difficult enough, but a sense of real urgency is created by a tight time timit.

When he finally reaches his Fuzzy friend, Clyde must work out how to rescue him in one of the now-notorious Torture Screens. These are the real stars of the show (and were so popular, they formed the basis of the superlative sequel). A combination of finely honed reflexes and puzzle solving is required to save the day.

However, even failure here isn't too disappointing as you're treated to one of the graphical highlights of the game. The gory death sequences will have you creased up with laughter, even after seeing them several times The top-notch graphical quality extends to the rest of the game with a rainbow full of colours (including nonstandard ones!) decorating all the scenery. There's even a waterfall, complete with parallax scrolling and a clever sound effect that gets louder as you approach. A variety of kickin' tunes throughout completes the nearperfect presentation.

But what else do you expect from the Rowlands brothers? Their dedication to the C64 is proven in both the Creatures games. If a easy to tell they were designed and programmed especially to make best use of the C64, proving what a powerful computer if still is little monsters. Collecting parchments reveals the letters of a computer code needed to finish the level. Cash collected from dead nasties, or in secret treasure rooms. can be spent in the level shop for extra firepower, temporary immunity and an extension to the game's overall time limit.

If you missed Creatures the first time round, you're a very silly person indeed. Four brass beer tokens for such an amazing game must be the bargain of the year.

There doesn't sound a lot to the game, and there isn't. Somehow though its simplicity holds a strange compulsion. Maybe it's because what little there is here has been so well implemented - someone's obviously done overtime on the playtesting. It might have been a boring blast, but for a strict time limit which forces you to rush around, skillully avoiding most of the baddies,

After a while it does get a bit repetitive, with identical gameplay on each level. What really impresses, and keeps you playing, is the topnotch graphical quality. The backdrops are very detailed, yet extremely colourful, and come complete with a clever parallax effect. A catchy soundtrack is the icing on the cake in a release ideally suited to budget.

veryone loves a good blast. Brain off, line button down — it's fun, isn't it? After all, noone really gets killed. The bullets aren't real, the baddies don't really die, and the whole thing's just a harmless fantasy — or is it?

A blatant attempt to cash in on George Bush's drug witch-hunt, Narc's a fair conversion of a reprehensible Williams coin—op. Set in a suburban jungle where everyone's a drug pusher, you play a bad-assed cop who solves the drug war single-handedly, by blowing away everyone he meets, climaxing in a deadly encounter with Mr Big. Don't bother arresting them, that's for the cissies. This is community policing. Dirty Harry style, where no-one is innocent so why prove them guilty? This also casts the police as lawless murderers, but if you make the criminals psychotic enough no-one will even notice, let alone mind.

A derivative horizontal push-scroller. Narc only differs from RoboCop in that you can move in and out of the screen — or at least the bottom three inches of it! The pushers altack with relentless zeal, blasting you to hell with bullets you can narely see let alone avoid. The only 'tactic' available is to zigzag wildly across the pavement — the pushers follow, but you stay one step ahead. It is possible to arrest them, but you won't live long if you try. Best just blow 'em away — at least some of them drop collectables, such as money, drugs, bullets and rockets. At the end of each level, bonus points are given for evidence collected (beats me, too) and for arrests, ie enemies you accidently bumped into while you were trying to shoot them.

You can't have a happening blaster without a good control system, and Narc's sucks! Try to walk into the screen while you're firing and you'll probably execute an unleasibly high (and totally useless) leap. Using the all-powerful hire-and-torget rockets is a bit haphazard too — you waste most of them by firing accidentally (nice 'exploding limbs' effect though).

Worst of all is that pathetic crouch — to kill a guard dog you have to stoop down to their level before blasting. This is achieved by hitting the shift key — you regain your full height automatically, and usually at the least opportunity moment! Can you imagine how annoying this is First sign of a mutt. you have to let go of the joystick and press shift, the computer gets you back on your feet while there's still dogs to kill s you nit 'shift' again... AAARRAGGHHH! It's unbelievable!

Like I said, everyone loves a good blast, but Narc has all the excitement and charm of a use teabag. Not only is it a boring, skill-free zone, its trivialisation of an important social issue leaves foul taste in the mouth. And what would it solve What would happen if you beat the big boss and blew his narcolics ring apart? Fewer drugs on the streets would push up the prices, so the addicts would have to mug and steal even mon to get the cash. To make them go further, the pushers (make no mistake, there'll always be another pusher) would add all sorts of impurities making the drugs even more dangerous, and rive gangs would light bloody wars over Mr Big's former territory. There'd be more bloodshed, more killing, and more suffering — and all because the authorities insist on treating addicts like criminals instead of people with a sickness. What a great theme for a game! (Er. can I have my soap box back now please? — Ed).

SUPER MONACO GP

Kixx, £3.99 casseHe With Nigel Mansell almost certain to be the first British World Racing Champion since the last one (James Hunt in '76), we computer bods'll soon be unable to move for drivers (a bit like motoring through London in the rush hour). First off the starting grid is Super Monaco GP, a conversion of Sega's arcade sit-in jobbie - but will it take the chequered flag?

r loading you're offered the choice of three cars — an automatic, a four-geared racer and a super-duper top-of-the-range model with seven gears, an in-car stereo and wall-to-wall carpeting. Nice presentation, but the blimmin' thing's WRONG! According to the graphic, the fire button accelerates when it actually changes gear — the JOYSTICK controls acceleration and breaking. Well done lolks!

acceleration and breaking. Well done folks!

Driving games don't really lend themselves to intricate plots, and this one's no exception — just blast your way round a series of circuits, the practice lap giving your grid position. Finish too far back in the actual race and it's Gameoversville. Thankfully you aren't forced to reload the option screen, you just stick with the car you chose in the first place.

A half-hearted attempt at a firstperson perspective racer, it plays more like a viewed-from behind offering. The main sprite doesn't dominate enough of the lower screen to give the illusion of sitting behind the wheel, and the viewpoint's far too high — since when were F1 drivers 15 feet tall?

If this wasn't bad enough, the graphics are terrible! A boring, featureless track cuts its way through a boring, featureless backdrop which in turn meets a boring, featureless skyline halfway up the screen. You do get a feeling of speed, but with such drab surroundings you'll just be getting nowhere quickly. Your car's pretty boring too, but at least it's well animated — you'll love the way the steering wheel turns on corners!

Options are limited to choosing your controls at the start of the game, and that's it! You can't choose the next track or number of laps per race, and the gear controls are the only difference in the cars — if you expect to win some dosh and upgrade the thing, forget it!

Weather conditions are random and make very little difference to the game anyway, and pit stops aren't catered for at all! The car accelerates like a Skoda. taking ages to reach top whack, but this doesn't really make it difficult — it's almost impossible to leave the track! Just hold the white line until you reach the bend then steer — it's so forgiving even Phil could manage it!

If you're mad keen on driving games you might find something to your liking here, but I doubt it. Smooth scrolling and a sensible multiload don't compensate for lousy graphics, nonexistent options and gameplay so easy you'll crash through sheer boredom. Save your dosh, this game's the pits!

Early days

The first video game to make general release was Pong, a sort of tennis thingle with blocky, black-and-simple even PD could understand it. The real crumblies among you might have a Binatone machine in the attic, featuring football and squash variants and options to change the bounce angle as well as ordinary Pong, but if you haven't there's always the PD version.

Using the two-paddle-per-player approach of Football Pong, the Commodore game (part of the 'More Than Nops' demo) is a very close conversion of the original. Although it's twoplayers only, don't let this put you off — this is the sort of game everyone takes the rise out of but still want to play it every time they come round your house. Neat, slick, and fiendishly addictive an essential purchasel Paddle power!

The paddle-and-ball approach reached its logical conclusion in Breakout, the aim of which was to blast away a wall of bricks. First released in 1976, later versions such as Arkanoid leatured better graphics and flashy power-ups.

Although PD-tribute Hallax also boasts improved graphics and wild upgrades, the playing area's too narrow and paddle control too sluggish to make it a classic. The power-up icons fall at random rather than from battered bricks, but you still have all the usual troubles collecting them — how long can you afford to take your eye off the ball without coming to grief? Not a classic, even at PD prices. Save up and buy The Hit Squad's masterful Arkanoid II — Revenge of Doh

Spaced out

Whoopee — the game that revolutionised computer games! When first released in 1978. Space Invaders was cited in divorce cases and almost exhausted the Japanese treasury's supply of ten Yen pieces!

Although the original was monochrome, the Illusion of colour was achieved by laying plastic film on the monitor screen.

Unlike the original. The C64 version boasts an amazing palette of THREE colours! WOW! Unfortunately it's a straight conversion of the Commodore Pet (remember them?) outing, and also boasts some of the clumsiest looking. sprites I've ever seen. I'm no programmer, but I'm sure if couldn't be too hard to incorporate C64 graphics into the Pet routines, especially when you've gone to the trouble of converting in the first place. Smaller, better defined sprite would've been a big improvement, but a good old nostalgic blast nonetheless.

X-rated

Innovative though it was, Space Invaders was essentially a very limited game - if the aliens were smart enough to launch an Earth invasion why did they attack in neat little lines, almost asking to get their arses kicked? Galaxians, released a year later, featured better graphics, snappier sound and above all more involved gameplay - this time the baddies broke formation and swooped on their unsuspecting (oe, showering him with bombs on the way)

The best PD version is Galaxian, a last playable interpretation of the original. A very close copy, the presentation screen and primitive sound FX are retained, even down to the three-second ditty on starting. On the minus side the big baddles that descended with a couple of escorts are conspicuous by their

Come fly with me... it may be just Space Invaders - The Next Generation, but GALAXIANS is still a well 'ard blast from the past! Phwee, phwee, doddleoodleooh!

into grave

I've yet to see a true interpretation of this wee gen; on the Commodore - Meteor Strike is interesting enough, but it just isn't Asteroids.

The ship doesn't rotate but moves in eight directions, with no momentum. The rocks themselves come in two sizes, both of which are destroyed on impact, you can't hyperspace. and what happened to that spanky little space ship that slid across the screen firing back?

Not a true interpretation by any means, but to be fair to SNACK MAN's a great game — if you don't believe me, check out this month's megatape!

the programmer it was never meant to beit's a fun game in its own right. If anyone has a better PD Asteroids, bung us a copy

Wackawackawacka

Now here's a weird one. Released in 1981, Pacman was immensely popular in its day and still has something of a cult following even now! Played on a single static screen, you guided your sprite (which looked suspiciously like a mutilated yellow tennis ball) round a maze, gobbling up dots and fruit as you went. Whichever way you turned four ghosts with an appetite for raw Pacman were in hot pursuit. Luckily eating a 'power pill' made them temporarily vulnerable, enabling you to scoff them instead!

John McCarthy's tribute Snack Man is one of the closest PD conversions I've ever seen. The sound is equally as terrible and momentum makes it just as hard to turn corners, but it's as blindingly playable as the arcade original Make no mistake, this one's a corker! Unfortunately, its only failing stands out like a sore thumb, even on the screenshols — yes, those multicoloured dog biscuits are the gnosts! It's a pity such a brilliant game is let down by shoddy graphics, but as it plays like a dream I suggest you grab a copy anyway.

Get orf moi cabbages! Another 1981 release, Centipede had you blasting away a you-know-what, segment by segment. Your movement was limited to the lower half of the screen, and further hampered by the 'mushrooms' liberally scattered across the playing area. These took several shots to wipe, and often got in the way when aiming at your multi-legged adversary.

Fans of the coin-op will love Centripod, an inexact but playable interpretation of the original. The graphics are line, the centipede still splits into two when you hit a middle segment, and the mushrooms are just as irritating. The centipede itself behaves exactly like it should, but the spider patrolling the foot of the screen bounces loo high and moves too absence, and although the sprites are close to the arcade classic, they aren't animated at all when in formation. Even so, it's silky-smooth, lightning-tast and a great play to boot. (Er. what VD means here is that the game's as smooth as cotton, as tast as Phil and an average blast: Just like the original! - Ed).

Okay, so it's sod all like Asteroids... METEOR STRIKE isn't bad, and we've yet to see a true PD clone.

Also worth a mention is Galaga, a PD tribute to the 1990s Galaxians update. So why does it look and play like a ZX81 game? Ho hum!

Ooh, me asteroids!

1979 also saw the release of Atari's Asteroids, one of the most original games ever to hit the arcades. Mind-blowingly simple, you rotated a triangular ship left/right, moving in the direction laced by hitting the 'thrust' button, or if in real trouble you could disappear altogether and reappear somewhere else (hyperspace). Your task was to blast the huge boulders floating across the screen, splitting them into ever smaller pieces until they were finally smashed fast, making the game as a whole much less forgiving. Still worth a shot though especially at PD prices.

Better on your C64 than in your cabbages - CENTIPEDE's a corker and no mistake!

King of the swingers?

No arcade roundup would be complete without Nintendo's Dankey Kong (mistranslated from the Japanese for "Monkey Kong"), probably the first ever platform game and definitely the first release staming the omnipresent Mano. Climb the ladders, jump the barrels gather the goodles . I'm sure you get the ideal Set across four exciting levels, it climaxes in an epic battle with Kong himself out the rivets and watch him fall to his doom!

The C64 version is almost brilliant — the graphics and sound are a near-faultless reproduction of its arcade predecessor, the screen tayout is as accurate as the Commodore would allow, and the animation - wow

It only the gameplay was as good. The main sprile moves sluggishly at the best of times, but this slows to a steady crawl when he hurdles a barrel — you have to start your leap while it's still a good two inches away, and with barrels rolling down ladders at random it just isn't possible. Collision detection could be a little more forgiving too

Is that DONKEY KONG's backside? No, it's 's face! (The ZZap 64 'insert your own insult' kit — it's a sizzler!)

it could've been

Qix on the Blimey — one of my all-time arcade favourites! Oly is a game that really showed what you can do with utterly brilliant gameplay and completely cack graphics.

Played on a static screen (weren't they all in those days?), your sprite (a tiny dot) pairolled the outer perimeters of the playing area avoiding two enemy blobs at all costs. The big baddle, an interesting mathematical effect created using straight lines, dominated the screen. Your task was to make brave excursions into the playing area leaving a trail in your wake, boxing off sections of enemy ferritory and making if your own - capture 75% of the screen to complete the level. If your trail was hit before you made it back to triendlier climes. you died. Hesitate loo long, or lurn back on yourself and a kind of sparkly blob-type thing followed your trail (If you know what I mean)

Worth a look, but nowhere near as good as

Overall this game pack's very playable. Okay, I admit some of the graphics leave a little to be desired, but I think we can forgive Zeppelin for that — especially as I love martial-arts movies and am similarly fond of 'chop suey' beat-'em-up games. The only thing that puzzles me slightly is the inclusion of a cowboy game — why not keep it all in an Oriental vein? Mind you, that's a minor niggle 'coz Combat Pack #3's well worth the measly price tag.

Far Worse is World Championship Soccer, a chronic conversion of a dodgy Sega coin-op. As with Kick Off 2, it's an overhead-view, up-and-down-the-screen jobbie. However, here the ball is glued to your fool for easy dribbling. And thick computer goalies make things even simpler — by An innovative mixture of management and arcade action is on offer in Manchester United. Not to be confused with its superior sequel (Man Utd. Europe), this isn't a premier league title contender. Selection of players and formations is good, but let down by a dodgy match section.

Simple hit-and-hope footy takes place on a horizontally scrolling, overhead-view pitch, with no hills and lew thrills. But-glued-to-foot dribbling and the limitation of shoring similal ahead make for his son of lishing doesn't involve lazing by the river bank — you can't catch a 100kg swordfish with a cheapo rod and tin of maggots! Instead, you're equipped with a motor boat. Trouble is, you have to catch enough fish to pay for its hire and petrol, not to mention all your tackle.

Start by picking your navigation route through the South Seas, making sure you have enough fuel - run out and you have to pay for your own rescuel

Once at your chosen spot, the scene switches to a 3-D view from the back of the boat, with your rod in the middle. Attach a line of five types of bait. each used at a specific depth to attract a particular type of fish - the sketchy instructions don't give you the details. so it's trial and error. Reel out your line to the required depth and wait until seaguils are circling above. This is your cue to throw some chum (sardines) out to attract your prey. If everything's right (including your speed) you should get a bite - indicated by the rod bending. The big fish will soon pull your line out unless you quickly push up your clutch control to hold it, and pull back to reel in. Watch the drag bar though: if the line gets too tense it'll snap as the fish jumps out of the water (nice

It sounds tricky, but the realing-in process is a piece of cake, in easy mode at least. On the harder level, you have to watch your line tension more carefully, allowing some slack when the fish struggles.

To start with, though, the main problem I had was getting a bite at all. After several goes I hadn't even caught a sprat - I felt like going home and having my sardines for tea! But after all the waiting, my first catch was exhilarating felt real panic as I hastily lowered the boat's speed, aftered my clutch control and reeled in I was even leaning back in my chair!

The thrill of the first catch is never repeated, and it does get repetitive, but the long-term challenge of making enough money to travel to deeper waters (for the really big fish) keeps you

This is an interesting one to assess. It doesn't really simulate ice hockey that well, but is still playable. Unlike the ultrafast, brutal sport, International Ice Hockey is fairly slow-paced with the slightest body contact immediately punished by a spell in the sin bin. The only realism lies in the convincing mertia, the players having to turn around gradually. Most annoying is when you slam into the rink barrier, and are unable to control any of your players for several seconds. With practice, however, this situation can be avoided and the simplistic action enjoyed. It is possible to pass the puck around, but it's easier to 'dribble' all the way up the ice. ZZAP! 64 No.88 September 1992

AT LAST! 100% AMIGA ACTION FROM THE MAKERS OF ZZAP! 64: MAPS... CHEATS... TIPS... HINTS... COMPLETE SOLUTIONS... AND BOBBY MOS

apologising for stating the obvious, EVERY adventurer started out as a beginner! I wish I'd have had a beginner's guide when I lirst set out on the road to adventuredom, so

hopefully this article

Before the puzzla solving begins you'll need to explore your environment. To avoid getting hopelessly lost, you'll have to make a map keep that pencil and squared paper handy at all times! Direction commands can usually be abbreviated to N, S, NW, SE, etc, with U and D for UP and DOWN and, to aid you in your cartographical conquest, many adventure programs will detail which exits are available in each givven location if you just type 'EXITS' followed by 'RETURN'.

Most modern adventures have very logical maps, ie iff you go North and then South straight away, you'll end up back where you started. Trhis wasn't always the case — the map for Time Hobbit was horrendous, with locations scattered about without rhyme or reason, miaking it very difficult to draw. When taced with a game like this, draw a rough map lifst, updaiting the 'true' copy at regular intervals.

There aire as many ways of mapping as there are adventurers, the only 'right' way being the one that you're most comfortable with — buit whatever you do your maps should be clear, simple and informative. Give each location a name, eg The Bedroom. Forest Clearing, etc — anything you like as long as it's instantly recognisable. If you're told the exits are, for example, North, East and West draw a little line in these directions. That way you'll know at a glance where the unexplored locations are Don't assume these are the only exits though — you might be able to CLIMB a tree, or JUMP a lence. Maybe there's a trapdoor under the carpet, or a secret door, or ... I'm sure you get the idea! This creates another headache for mappers, of course — where do you draw the location for the top of the tree without interfering with the other locations? Alas, that's the problem with drawing a 3-D world on 2-D paper, and you'll have to play it by ear!

A-mate-ing escapes!

Another mapping hazard is the inevitable maze, a series of locations with the same description. For example, 'You are surrounded by bushes Exils N. S. E. W.' Fine, I'll go North, 'You are surrounded by bushes. Exits N. S. E. W. OK. I'll try East. 'You are surrounded...'

AARRGGHH! Because the text's the same, you can't tell if you've actually moved or not!

Most mazes can be solved by dropping objects, which are of course added to the location description. For example, if you drop a sword, move North, and find it's still there, you know you haven't moved — make a note of this on your map and try another direction! If the location description's the same but the sword's NOT present you know you're in a new location. Complex mazes aren't popular among adventurers — there's nothing clever about them, and they're not too interesting, to say the least. Thankfully most modern games only have short, logical mazes.

Do war?

To get anywhere in an adventure you'll need to do more than make a map! When exploring a location, the golden rule is EXAMINE everything, object or otherwise — clues turn up in the unlikeliest of places! Don't be put off by 'you see nothing special'-type responses either. This just means that a particular item might not be significant. SEARCH is often a synonym of EXAMINE, but this isn't always the case.

Always read location descriptions carefully, and be prepared to interact with almost anything — chairs can be sat 'in' or stood 'on', a picture could cover a wall safe, furniture can be moved... the possibilities are endless!

Finally, if you meet another person be triendly — TALK TO (whoever), or if you've got something specific to say. SAY TO (whoever) "message". You might also try GIVEing them something — you never know, you might get something back in return! (As long as it's a big plate of chips! — Phil).

Grab those

Basically there are two ways of solving item-based problems. First try looking at your inventory and see how it might help, or if that falls think about what objects might be needed and work out how to get them. Remember, there's more to an object than meets the eye — if you're looking for string, what about that old shoe you abandoned three locations ago? It might have a lace, or maybe you could unwind that cassette tape! Paperclips could be straightened and used to pick locks, a stick could be sharpened to make a spear, etc.

Objects can also be fitted together, eg you might some need bullets for the gun you've just found, or tie a rope to a bucket to get water from the well. Look out for potential clues, log — a spade suggests you could be in for a spot of digging, and a torch might be useful in dark locations. Always bear in mind what type of game you're playing as well - in a fairy tale' adventure you might plant a bean which suddenly grows, or find a genie by rubbing a lamp, but problems like these would be out of place in a Sci-Fi game.

When you're in

If you're really stuck, don't feel guilty about asking for help — or even looking at a solution Most adventurers need a little help every now and then, and apart from anything else it could be the game itself that's at fault! In days gone by, authors would make their games harder by demanding obscure inputs or illogical solutions eg in CRL's Frankenstein the only way to get through a locked door was to sit in a chair and WAIT for someone to open it! Another game demanded the phrase CUT BOND BLADES nothing else would work. (Be warned - severa older releases also contain bugs that stop you finishing the game at all.) Commands like this really ruin a game, and are thankfully very rare in modern adventures. When a player has the right idea the game's vocabulary should be able to cope with a variety of responses, increasing playability and keeping frustration to a minimum

So where do we go from here? Onwards and upwards of course! If you're serious about your adventuring you'd do well to subscribe to an adventure fanzine, put together by adventurers for adventurers! There are very few adventure games in the shops now, but there's a thriving cottage industry served by part-time mail-order firms — some of the best adventures ever written were produced this way. Finally, keep reading Bash Yer Brains in good of ZZAP! We'll continue to bring you the very best in homegrown adventures, with a fair few finding their way onto the covertage — stick with us, you an absolutely free Quickshot joystick. Yes, for an amazingly low £29.50, a copy of ZZAPI will drop onto your doormat for 12 months, and a wonderfully accurate QS joystick will wing its way to in a liffy (bag).

Not bad, huh? But If you think Offer A is funtabulous, wait till you get un eyeful of Offer B. Here you'll receive 12 leaves of XZAPI, plus the OS joystick AND a Trojan Phazer light-gun with six great games (worth £35 in the shops). The light-gun games are:Operation Wolf, Guastinger, Counts Storm, Ghost Town, Baby Sives and Goose Busters, and the price to you, gov? A very sWardsblu ragree that ZZAP! is the guiding light for the whole universe, and this month's subscription offer's the best thing since they invented the disposable polka-dot halibut. So send me the next 12 issues of ZZAPI with my choice of freebie, and I'll be eternally grateful (well... for the next ten seconds, at least).

So don't delay, I'll in the coupon and part it today. Wall, what are you walling for?...

Metro man, Phil King, puts his foot down as he test-drives EVERY C64 driving game ever released! And that's a lot. Who'll take the chequered flag? Who'll spin off? Lap up all the hottest racing action next ish.

Shockl Horror! PD's gone missing during his Dutch vacation! He was last een in the back of a police car, still clutching his bag of sweets.

However, one his Dutch contacts, Remi Ebus, has consented to take over the PD File.

WHAT A MEGA

megatastic Megatapes means double the games, double the action, double the fun. And it's not just a once-in-awhile treat - it's two tantalising tapes EVERY

Oh no - I can't go on! I can't go through life worrying myself silly about getting the next issue of ZZAP! I'm far too tight-fisted to subscribe, though, so please save me a copy every month, Mr Newsagent, and my pet hedgehog will forever be in your debt!
